have been a memorable event without a celebration.

THE biggest sight in New York and the grandest was the people. Drawn from every quarter of the country, of all conditions, they told a story which not all the set observances could tell. The world might be challenged in vain to match that crowd for general prosper-

a joke at your own expense; and you don't like to admit the grim truth of it. The point is that there was no creation of an office for a Republican in connection with the Custom House repairs. The place was to have been given to a Democratic politician if a Republican hadn't come a along in time to gather it in. However, nobody objects to your

Some Pennsylvanians are hurt because the troops from their State did not look so gorgeous as those from some other The complaint is based on the regulation uniform of the Pennsylvanians, which was outshone, of course, by men in fuss-and-feathers. Gowgawa do not make soldiers. The marching men whom the people most respect are the men who go on parade ready at the word of command to go into action. This is the way the Pennsylvania troops

A Pharisees' Movement. National Civil Service Reform League invites subscriptions to a monument to the memory of the late Postmas-ter Pearson, of New York. The Pharisees are determined to hand Mr. Pearson down to history as a martyr to the cause of Civil Service reform. Suppose Presiment to the memory of the late Postmasof Civil Service reform. Suppose Presi-appointment of agene Higgins was not more the fruit of the "spoils system" which the Pharise's profess to hold in such abhorrence. If any number of persons desire to creet a monument to Mr. Pearson, that is their own affair; but when they seek to make out of Mr. Pearson's death unearned capital for their special political "fad," that is quite another affair.

is their own affair; but when they seek to make out of Mr. Pearson's death unearned capital for their special political "fad," that is quite another affair.

The Centennial Ball.

The New York correspondent of the Pittaburgh Diepatch describes the Centennial ball as a disgraceful orgic, in which wine flowed like water, men became reckless and sick, women were insulted and some of their clothing torn from them, and more to the same effect. "There never was a French ball in town so disorderly and unlicensed as the great cassembly became after the supper room was opened." The annual French ball in New York runs with all the brakes off.

This is a surprising characterisation of an aftair conducted by the bluest blood of New York—so surprising as to be well nigh incredible. With the exception of the Times the New York newspapers speak of the crush and brilliancy of the affair, and there let the matter drop. The Times says: "The food was scattered everywhere indiscriminately—on the ladies' costumes and on the walls. Men pushed through the crowd with bottles of champagne in their hands, providing wine for their chance acquaintances. The scene was one of such confusion that a large number of the persons who witnessed it left the ball." This description the Times follows with the names of committeemen, doubtless to show who were responsible. As the home newspaper admits so much, the Dispatch picture may be acacepted as not overdrawn.

The ball, which turned out to be an orge with little or no dancing, was not absolutely essential to the celebration. It was this feature of the festivities whells bead a world exit the super and the confusion of the consulted provided and the super and the confusion of the country than all other diseases which beads would get tenthed and super and the confusion of the country than all other diseases the super of the festivities where he was a super with the provided provided and the super of the festivities which beads would get the man of the country than all other diseases which beads wo orgie with little or no daucing, was not absolutely essential to the celebration. It was this feature of the festivities which bred a world of trouble and conjusion and made ridiculous many persons bearing great names. How much worse could the "confusion" have been if the ball had been managed by the lower ten thousand for their own kind instead of by the exclusive Four Hundred for their own kind? And is "confusion" produced by champagne any more genteel than the same condition resulting from every-day beer or whisky at ten cents a drink?
